American Poetry, 1600-1900

<http://www.iun.edu/~lib/databases/>

American Poetry contains over 40,000 poems by more than 200 poets, covering the Colonial period to the early twentieth century, and drawn from over 1,200 printed sources. The collection begins with early Colonial poems such as John Wilson's 'A Song of Thanksgiving for the Lasting Remembrance of God's Wonderful Works' (1603), William Morrell's 'New England' (1625) and the complete works of Anne Bradstreet and Edward Taylor, and continues through to early twentieth-century writers such as Adelaide Crapsey and Vachel Lindsay. For the first time, major canonical poets, such as Emily Dickinson, Edgar Allan Poe, Phillis Wheatley, Walt Whitman and Herman Melville, and important literary groups, such as the Transcendentalists and the Knickerbocker school, can be read alongside substantial bodies of work by less familiar names such as Elizabeth Akers Allen, Richard Emmons, Lemuel Hopkins and Emma Lazarus.

U.S. Copyright

<http://www.copyright.gov>

Copyright is a very important issue, especially in academia. The U.S Copyright Office is the place to go when you have questions and are unsure whether or not you are in violation of copyright.

The U.S. Copyright's website is full of "information about the provisions of the copyright law and the procedures for making a registration or recordation." The website was created to address the needs of people who create materials, uses the materials of others and also the to concerns of the general public.

The website provides users with online tools to register for copyright. Users can also find links to copyright law and to other organizations related to copyright.

Here are some online resources you can access through IUCAT:

Crews, Kenneth D. (2006). Copyright for librarians and educators: creative strategies and practical solutions.

Wolff, Nancy E.(2007). The professional legal handbook.

The Library wants to be the place where students wish to be when on campus but outside of class. Providing more attractive spaces with access to technology for students to study, discover, and learn is important. Over the summer the Library will be working hard to enhance several spaces for next fall. In Fall 2009 phase 1 of the Information Commons (I.C.) opened – during summer 2010, 27 additional computers will be added to the I.C. area as part of phase 2 (along with additional comfortable furniture). In addition, the adjacent CyberCafe will be remodeled with additional computers, new furniture and flooring, and connections to printing. Laptops and scanners are available for checkout and use throughout the I.C. area. The Adaptive Technology and Multimedia Rooms will also open this summer. With more comfortable furniture available throughout the 3 library floors, in addition to the Reverend Lowery Commemorative Study Area, students with their own laptops or netbooks can access “IU Secure” wirelessly from anywhere in the Library (including the 3rd floor Quiet Zone). Finally, on the Library’s 3rd floor, an instruction room (330) will be upgraded with new tables, chairs, and technology, for the benefit of CETL (new technology to work with faculty), Library (information literacy sessions), and the Calumet Regional Archives (Indiana History credit course).

Having these improvements in place for fall will fit nicely with the new General Education efforts to reach all 1st year students with “Information Literacy” skills
