

The Indiana University Northwest School of Business and Economics is accredited by the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB International). AACSB International is a not-for-profit organization consisting of education organizations and corporations. Its mission is excellence in management education in colleges and universities. Headquartered in Tampa, Florida, AACSB International is the premier accrediting agency and service organization for business schools.

The School of Business & Economics offers a Bachelor of Science in Business Administration with concentrations in Financial Information Systems and in Business Administration, and a Masters in Business Administration. More than 448 students are enrolled in the undergraduate program and 132 are enrolled students in the graduate program. The School of Business & Economics is led by Dean Anna S. Rominger and includes 16 full-time faculty members in the fields of marketing, management, accounting, finance, and management information systems.

The objective of the Indiana University Northwest Business Alliance is to create a professional partnership between the Indiana University Northwest School of Business & Economics and members of the northwest Indiana Business Community who join the Alliance. This partnership is intended to increase the interaction between the School and the business community in the following ways: (1) by leveraging faculty and staff expertise to assist local businesses and (2) by preparing and retaining the School's students for jobs in northwest Indiana by providing them internships and ensuring business input into the School's curriculum planning and Mission processes.

LYNN BREWER

promises to provide an insider's view of Enron in her presentation, "Confessions of an Enron Executive," and will discuss corporate culture and the personalities who built and destroyed the company. She also will discuss the mistakes that good companies can make which could lead to disaster.

After leaving Enron and reporting its activities with investigators, Brewer wrote the 2002 book, Confessions of an Enron Executive: A Whistleblower's Story, an account of her career with the company and her decision to blow the whistle.

In nearly three years at Enron Brewer was responsible for risk management in energy operations, the e-commerce initiatives for Enron's water subsidiary and competitive intelligence for Enron Broadband Services. She witnessed numerous instances of illegal and corrupt dealings, including bank fraud, espionage, power price manipulation, and gross overstatements to the press, public and financial world. She had to resign her position and report the unethical behavior to the government when her efforts to raise the issue internally fell upon deaf ears.

Prior to joining Enron, Brewer worked in forensic accounting and spent 18 years as a legal professional in private practice until she joined Ralston Purina, where she worked in corporate development for the general counsel and chief financial officer.

Since leaving Enron, Brewer has provided details into the company's rise and fall in many lectures with the goal of making her audiences aware of how vulnerable they are to becoming victims of fraud and corruption. She is the founding chairman and chief executive officer of The Integrity Institute, Inc., which predicts and indexes corporate integrity. She serves on the leadership council of the Open Compliance and Ethics Group.
