

Well I knew I wanted to get into social work, and after the deciding I wanted to be in social work I just kind of started searching the internet, looking around for schools that were convenient to get to, and had the program and this is actually one of the only programs that was in the area that i could go to that was actually cost effective and nearby.

Well an MSW from IU Northwest is definitely going to help someone in their career path in social work. Once you get your degree, and you get some experience, that you can expect that you're probably going to find yourself being asked to fill some kind of more administrative or managerial position.

I would absolutely recommend IUN to my friends and family members who are thinking about being a graduate degree. The programs that are offered are accessible, they're cost-effective, and you can go a work around your work schedule to achieve your goals of education while you're working it out.
